PROFESSIONAL PROFILE

I am currently Senior Lecturer in Asian Security and Asian Affairs in the School of International Relations at the University of St Andrews, Scotland. My expert knowledge concerns the global rise of India and China, great power politics, shifting world orders, authoritarianism, the Asian Century, Hindu nationalism, and the interplay between national identity, security and domestic politics in South Asia (primarily India) and East Asia (primarily China). I generate major new understandings in these fields by using cross-disciplinary approaches from IR Theory and Social Psychology concerning the formation of values, norms and identities, as well as methodologies relating to constructivism, securitization, narratives, othering and perceptions. These practices produce new theoretical insights such as “security identity”, which uses history and memory to explain why different countries pursue particular foreign policy agendas. So far, I have applied this pioneering approach to analyse and compare India and China.

I also act as a public commentator who shares his expertise with a range of audiences, so as to improve their understanding of vital dynamics in the contemporary world. By building engagement on topics of global significance, I seek to energetically enrich society’s awareness and knowledge of current affairs concerning Asian Security issues relating to India, China, North Korea, Japan and the US. To transmit my specialised knowledge into the international public domain, I deliver many invited talks, am regularly interviewed by global media groups, and frequently write various analysis pieces. Through my established academic leadership and reliable reputation with colleagues inside and outside my home University, I further use my longstanding experience to enhance research and teaching practices globally.

TEACHING / PEDAGOGICAL ACTIVITIES

Since 2012, I have been recognized as a Fellow by the UK's Higher Education Academy (HEA) for my teaching and professional abilities. My teaching remit regularly includes utilising these key skills:

- independently designing reading lists, module booklets, PowerPoint lecture slides and hand-outs appropriate to the different audiences / level of students to whom I am teaching different topics;
- enhancing student skills through written feedback for all presentations given by my students;
- ensuring that I am accessible to students via regularly scheduled Office Hours, promptly responding to emails, and providing detailed, constructive and timely feedback on all written work;
- marking / re-marking essays, examination scripts and dissertations - including working with colleagues regarding cases of plagiarism (& using Turnitin / Urkund) - as well as exam moderation;
- effectively liaising with administrative colleagues concerning prompt essay collection / return of scripts / marks, recording attendance, and scheduling all marking, examination & feedback needs;
- using roleplaying & interactive activities to enhance teaching engagement, impact and enjoyment;
- * successfully carrying out hybrid teaching (including lectures and seminars) during the Covid-19 pandemic to a simultaneous mix of in-person and on-line students via the use of MS Teams;

> TEACHING-ORIENTATED RESEARCH AND INNOVATIONS:

- my major research interests have critically informed three of my recent projects – Great Power Attributes; Dictionary of Politics & International Relations in China; and Dictionary of Politics & International Relations in India – which define scholarly explanations in these fields;
- my Handbook of China's Governance & Domestic Politics (2013) appeared in paperback in 2015, making it accessible to ever more students / teachers, and confirmed its pedagogical utility;
- upcoming projects, such as a BBC Documentary on 'Modi's India' and a Card Game on great powers ('Hegemon', currently being play-tested), will also shape / inform learning on these topics;

> TAUGHT MODULES AT ST ANDREWS (UNDERGRADUATE):

(2010 >) IR1006: Foreign Policy Analysis and International Security [as part of School team]:

- deliver lectures across 3 sessions on contemporary Indian / Chinese Foreign Policy to over 350 first year students as part of a core introductory module within the School of International Relations;

- proactively apply my research-led teaching ethos and practice by delivering specifically designed lectures that are highly engaging, contemporarily relevant and thought-provoking in nature;

(2010 >) IR3046: Foreign Policy of Modern China [module convener]:

- revamped / updated to produce a more engaging, theoretically / empirically structured and globally relevant module, especially concerning corruption, environmental and security challenges;
- utilised to provide a springboard for producing new directions in my own research concerning Chinese foreign policy, and to bolster student learning on a subject of current day importance;

(2012 >) IR4545: Indian Foreign Policy [module convener]:

- introduced as an entirely original module - the first of its kind in the EU - that focuses on the contemporary emergence of India and its foreign policy ambitions as a transitioning great power;
- emblematic of my research-led teaching whereby my core research interests translate into innovative learning opportunities, supported by a textbook I specifically wrote for this module;

(2010 >) IR4099: Undergraduate Dissertation [as part of School team]:

- facilitate student-led research on topics mainly relating to modern-day South Asia and East Asia;
- provide regular / structured brainstorming, discussion and feedback sessions for the successful researching, writing and completion of 5-6 12,000-word Undergraduate Dissertations every year;

> TAUGHT MODULES AT ST ANDREWS (POSTGRADUATE):

(2011 >) IR5040: Emergent Great Powers [module convener]:

- conceived as an entirely new / dynamic module, in terms of subject matter, and empirical / comparative / theoretical focus – it has no equivalent at any other University anywhere in the world;
- typifies my research-led teaching whereby my research translates into pioneering new learning opportunities, supported by a single-authored monograph I specifically wrote around this module;

(2010 >) IR5099: Postgraduate Dissertation [as part of School team]:

- supervise student-led research on topics mainly relating to the study of South Asia and East Asia;
- assist regular / structured brainstorming, discussion and feedback sessions for the successful researching, writing and completion of 2-4 12,000-word Postgraduate Dissertations per year;

(2015-7) IR5036: Critical Security Studies [module convener / co-convener]:

- comprehensively reconceptualized this module in order to give students a much more rigorous, informative and theoretically challenging appreciation of current debates in critical security studies;
- led to successfully re-establishing the School's MLitt in International Security Studies, and used diverse research expertise from across the School as part of a novel team-teaching approach;
- volunteering for this role, I displayed collegiality & commitment to enhancing the School's PG teaching, and took responsibility to advance teaching remits in a specific programme of study;

> TEACHING ACTIVITIES OUTSIDE ST ANDREWS:

(2015 >) South Asian Studies (Guest Lecturer, University of Edinburgh). [invited]

(2015) Chinese Governance & Politics (Visiting Scholar / Lecturer, Chinese University of Hong Kong). [taught as part of an International Summer School – appointed after competitive application]
